Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurIn this thoughtful novel set on a sun-baked island, Adrian Hartman, the charismatic director of the Serendipity holiday community, is responsible for ensuring the perfect mindful break, with personal growth and inner peace guaranteed. People return year after year to bare their souls. For some, Adrian IS Serendipity. But Adrian disappears, and with him goes the serenity of his staff and guests, who are bewildered without their leader. The hostility of the local villagers is beginning to boil over. Is their anger justified or are the visitors, each in a different way, just paranoid?As romance turns sour and conflict threatens the stability of both communities, everyone has to find their own way to survive. This evocative story explores the decisions of adults who still need to come of age, the effect of well-intentioned tourism on a traditional community, and the real meaning of getting away from it all. Présentation de l'auteur In this thoughtful novel set on a sun-baked island, Adrian Hartman, the charismatic director of the Serendipity holiday community, is responsible for ensuring the perfect mindful break, with personal growth and inner peace guaranteed. As romance turns sour and conflict threatens the stability of both communities, everyone has to find their own way to survive. This evocative story explores the decisions of adults who still need to come of age, the effect of well-intentioned tourism on a traditional community, and the real meaning of getting away from it all. Biographie de l'auteur Jessica Norrie was born in London and studied French Literature at the University of Sussex and Education at the University of Sheffield. She taught for a while in Paris and Dijon, and since returning to the UK has taught English, French and Spanish to age groups from 5 to 80 in settings including schools, private tuition, universities and teacher training departments, and adult education. She is fascinated by languages and has worked hard to make language learning approachable and fun even for the most nervous students. She also has a postgraduate translation diploma, which led to work as a freelance translator and has published occasional journalism and collaborated on a Primary French textbook (Clubs les Ftes, with Jan Lewandowski, Scholastic 2009). She has two grown up children and her hobbies include singing in the soprano section of the Hackney Singers, and regular but futile attempts to do justice to Chopin. The Infinity Pool is her first novel, drawing on many years of travel and encounters, and she already has several ideas for another.
